

Why We Flutter: Elayna

Elayna was diagnosed in April of 2014 (at 5 years old) with stage 3 kidney cancer. We watched our sweet girl's life change in an instant. She had major surgeries, chemotherapy, and radiation, and when treatment ended we celebrated remission, but ten months later we were told that she had relapsed. It was the new worst day of our lives. We knew that her treatment would be even harder and longer, and that our chances of beating it weren't as great. She had to fight even harder the second time, completing extremely toxic treatment, and again celebrated remission. Sadly, we learned in fall of 2016 that she had relapsed again and her fight was far from over. In fact, she continued to fight for her life until last month when she passed away at the age of 9, on August 22nd.

Watching her fight the third time was excruciating. The worst part was that there has been no direct treatment path since our first time through treatment- and that is directly because of a lack in funding for pediatric cancer research. Elayna believed that we need more research and treatment options, and that is why she spent countless hours fluttering homes the past few years. It's too late to save her, but its not too late for so many others.

You would think that Elayna would've felt sorry for herself. What she did instead is enjoyed every minute of her life. She inspired so many people. While other children are wishing for toys, she was wishing for a cure for all children with cancer. So am I.

I believe that Unravel can help us cure childhood cancer, and that is why I spend the month of September fluttering. Please consider donating in honor of children who continue to fight, and in memory of children like Elayna, who are so very missed. – Elayna's mother

About Unravel Pediatric Cancer

Inspired by the life of Jennifer Lynn Kranz, who was diagnosed with an incurable brain tumor called DIPG on her sixth birthday, Unravel is working to spread awareness about the harsh realities of pediatric cancer research, which is alarmingly and devastatingly underfunded. All money raised by and for Unravel goes directly to the fight against pediatric cancer. To find out more about what Unravel supports, please visit our website at www.unravelpediatriccancer.org.
